War Summary of The Latest Events

United States regular troops, part of, if not the whole of, the division which President Wilson directed to proceed to France "at the earliest possible time," have landed at a French port, and will at once proceed to a point near the front to complete training. The men were accorded a tremendously enthusiastic reception by thousands of French people, whose hearts were gladdened by this visible evidence of the determination of the great Republic to fight in France, and soon, it is to be hoped, in Germany, for the protection of their own democracy and the freedom of the nations allied against the Hun. The men who will strike the first blows as an official United States force operating against the barbarians are a seasoned lot, and their training period is not likely to be a long one. They will be an independant command under General Pershing, with the French at the head of operations. No accident marred the voyage of the transports carrying these troops from American shores, and thus once again the failure of the German U-boats as decisive factors in the war is emphasized. If the U-boats and their commanders were all that the Junkers claim for them, how is it possible that so large a number of convoys as were required to carry the American contingent and its equipment, could make the voyage in safety? Of course, they would be adequately convoyed, and the U-boats do not cherish adventures in which they have not all the advantage of surprise and range. The safe landing of the United States troops is a creditable performance to the navies concerned. It will be followed, no doubt, by a steady stream of reinforcements, the statement having been made, on apparently good authority, that 100,000 more men are ready to cross at any time.

Against British merchant shipping the U-boats and mines were less successful last week than in the previous week, twenty-one vessels of more than 1,600 tons each and seven under 1,600 tons being sunk. This compares with twenty-seven larger and five smaller vessels sunk, as announced in the preceding statement. No fishing vessels were destroyed in either week. The boast of the Huns that the fine summer days would give opportunity for their brave U-boat men to sweep the seas of British commerce does not fit in with the record of their accomplishments. With the passing days the British and Allied machinery for fighting the subs grows stronger, and it would not be surprising if in the

for the brave U-boat men to sweep
the seas of British commerce does not fit in with the record of their accomplishments. With the passing days
the British and Allied machinery for fighting the subs grows stronger, and it would not be surprising if in the near future foe submarine bases were attacked by strong naval and aerial forces, and in some cases, on the coast of Belgium with land forces acting in conjunction.

Advances of the British around Lens and near Fontaine-les-Croisilles are dismissed by the Germans with the assertion that the British attacks were repulsed, though it is admitted that "the enemy occupied a fortified
trench on both sides of the Arras-Lens road." The constant attempts of the Germans to belittle successes of the Allies have grown with the steady succession of defeats they have met with on the Western front, and their inability to give effective help to their allies, the Turks and the Bulgars, in Macedonia, Palestine and Mesopotamia
German critics have for some time now had a new role to fill. They used to speculate on new victories for their own arms, and explain the successes previously won. Now they are trying to figure out when and where the Allies, and especially the British,
will strike next. One of them, in a review mentioned in the latest cables,
believes that the blow will come north of Ypres; another makes the guess that it will be in the Warneton district. Both are certain that another blow is coming.

On the Macedonian front there was some lively fighting, in which the British ambuscaded a number of enemy patrols, and the French beat off
an attack on their trenches following a violent bombardment. It would seem that the enemy in this region is becoming anxious. It is not unreasonable to suppose that he is very much concerned as to the plans of the Allies since the recent occurrences in Greece, which bode no good for him.

denburg Evidently Feels Army Cannot Remain on the Live All Summer, but Action of "H" Units Indicates Nervousness of H-1 Generals.

June 26.—There are signs that the French front in the Balkans is either nervous or preparing an offensive. "Feelers" has been carried by Field Marshal von Hindenburg at various points, principally in the Laon plateau. One of these was an effort to break through the French line at a point where the German units temporarily ousted the French from a short trench system of Monkey Mountain. It was important that both sides possess observatories for counter-attack immediately all the ground lost. Excellent measuring a few miles which the German position was precarious. On this occasion a shock troops advanced in a series of bombardment, in the yard of the adjacent trench searched by shells. The German "shockers" as soon as they entered their determined effort turned over as they had gained to the an infantry division, who failed to hold them when they for a defensive effort. The French visited the entire trench sector Saturday and French firmly established, the Germans on the other side were deprived of observation, thus their artillery was

VENIZELOS IS PREMIER.

Old Statesman Has Been Sent for by New King.

ATHENS, June 26.—The Greek Cabinet, headed by Alexander Zaimis, has resigned.

King Alexander has informed M. Jonnart, the high commissioner representing France, Great Britain, and Russia, that he will ask former Premier Venizelos to form a new Cabinet.

By the advice of M. Jonnart, the Provisional Government will leave Salonica for Piraeus. A strong detachment of gendarmerie which left Salonica for Athens on Sunday will occupy the city in conjunction with French troops. As soon as the new order is established two regiments of Greek troops at Salonica will proceed to Athens. The resignation of Premier Zaimis was apparently due to his unwillingness that the Salonica French troops should occupy Athens in order that perfect order should be maintained in the city.

Not only has the adherence to the Provisional Government been proclaimed in all the chief centres in Thessaly, but similar action was taken in Epirus after the landing of the French detachment at Preveza. Troops belonging to the Provisional Government were also disembarked, and later General Papanastasiou arrived as a representative of Venizelos. He was received by all the people, with the metropolitan at their head. The reservists are still somewhat restive in some parts of the Peloponnese, but the Government has sent an emissary to explain the situation plainly to the party leaders, and it is expected his mission will restore tranquillity. Venizelists, however, have been maltreated at Pyrgos, where the notorious anti-allied naval officer, Typalos, had gone. Arrests in the Peloponnese will certainly be necessary, but as the allied fleets can immediately blockade the Peloponnese to prevent the current crop, which is the country's resource, from reaching the world's markets, any general seditious movement is extremely unlikely. The large number of Venizelists in Peloponnese is steadily growing.

HIGH COST OF WAR.

Staggering Figures Named by Chancellor of Exchequer.

LONDON, June 26.—The total national expenditure for the nine weeks from October 8 to December 9 last was on a daily average of £6,615,000, says a statement in detail, prepared by Andrew Bonar Law, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the House of Commons.

For the five weeks from April 1 to May 5, 1917, the statement shows the daily average of expenditure was £7,971,000, while for the five weeks from May 6 to June 9 it was £7,532,000.

For the ten weeks from April 1 to June 9, the expenditure is shown to have averaged £7,752,000.

For the respective periods set forth the actual war expenditure, the Chancellor states, was £5,714,000, £7,457,000, £5,989,000 and £6,723,000.

The increase in expenditure for army service, says the statement, is in part attributable to payments and advances which are ultimately recoverable. The expenditure for munitions was affected by temporary

British Ready to Thrust at a Fresh Point.

General Haig Has Almost Completed the Surrounding of Lens—A Battle is Promised in the Near Future at the North Sea End of the Long Allied Line.

LONDON, June 26. — The announcement in Sir Douglas Haig's official report that British guns and British infantry were engaged at Lombartzyde reveals an entirely new quarter of attack on the Prussian lines in Belgium. Lombartzyde is the beach of Nieupoort and marks the North Sea end of the long allied line, the other extremity of which rests on the frontier of Switzerland.

The last nine miles of coast from Lombartzyde to the French frontier is in Belgian hands. It is called the Hooze Duyn, and has several excellent beaches, such as Oost Dunkerke, Coxyde, Zeepanne, and La Panne, with good roads leading to a highway parallel to the coast and about a mile from it. Back of this is a railroad from France through Furnes to Dixmude, while another line connects Nieupoort and Dixmude. Two canals, one to Furnes and the other to Dixmude and Ypres add to the excellent communications serving as lines of supply for this front.

This section of the allied line has been held by the Belgian army as far as Boesinghe, just below Het Sas and about three and a half miles north-northwest of Ypres. It has been all the more easily guarded because the whole country between the railway and the Yser as far as Dixmude, has been flooded to a depth of six or seven feet, making it impassable. From Dixmude to Het Sas there have been desultory bombardments for the last two years, in which French guns have had a share since last December. This published announcement, however, is the first hint of British action in Belgium so near the coast.

Further south the British are by no means idle. They have forced the Prussians out of the narrow strip of land, comprising about eight square miles, along the Armentieres-Menin railway and the highway, and now occupy everything up to the gates of Warneton, still further narrowing the triangle between the Comines canal and the River Lys, in which the Prussians have been penned.

General Plumer is continuing his thrust toward Comines, along the Lys and the canal, proceeding on both sides of the triangle. If his forces can effect a junction at Comines before the Prussians escape the net, he will reap a rich harvest of prisoners, which will do more to destroy the Kaiser's army than any blow yet struck. Even if the Prussians escape, the British still will be in a position to descend on Lille from the north and relieve the manufacturing centres of Turcoing and Roubaix.

Equally important is the drawing of the British net closer around Lens, where the Canadians have taken one of the strongest series of Prussian trenches in this vicinity. It lies less than a mile to the southwest of the town and north of the Riots in Cork.

CORK, June 26.—One man killed and a score injured was the toll in Sunday's conflict between Sinn Feiners and the police. Serious disorders occurred, including an attack on the jail in an effort to liberate the political prisoners detained there, and attacks on various military recruiting quarters in the centre of the town.

A number of the clergy pleaded in vain with the Sinn Feiners to keep the peace, and finally the police, armed with carbines, bayonets, and revolvers, charged at double quick down Patrick street. Some of the crowd stood their ground, replying with a fusillade of clubs and stones, but the majority fled into the adjacent streets. The injured were quickly gathered up by stretcher-bearers and taken to the hospital.

The soldiers, who up to this time were confined to barracks, were now called out. They planted machine guns in the centre of Patrick street and patrolled the scene of the disturbances until early Monday morning, when quiet was restored. They then returned to barracks.

Decoration for Murderer.

AMSTERDAM, June 26.—Captain Brandenburg, who conducted the air raids on London on June 13 has received the order of Pour le Merite. It is interesting to record that while academic discussion of reprisals continues in England that, judging from the talk of German prisoners, German troops are grumbling bitterly that it is easier for their airmen to attack open cities in England than to defend their own infantry in the front lines. At the battle of Messines the German infantry and artillery were both apparently deserted by the German air service.

Russians Prepare Drive.

LONDON, June 26.—The possibility of a Russian offensive on the old battlefields of Galicia and Volhynia, a renewal of General Brussiloff's 1916 drive for Lemberg and Kovel, is discussed with eagerness here in the light of the German and Austrian official statements.

west of the town and north of the Souchez River, at the foot of Reservoir Hill. Adjoining it is coal pit No. 3 of the Lievin mines, which it is hoped soon will be restored to production. The Prussians had burned all the shaft timbers, blocked the galleries, and destroyed the miners' cages, but new machinery now is on its way from England.

The Souchez River, so often mentioned in the despatches from headquarters, is a little brook, running north-easterly between Lievin and Lens, passing the south-eastern corner of the town. South of the river and also less than a mile away the British hold the electric light plant and some brickyards, between Eleu and Lievin. The plant stands on the slope of a hill where Prussian trenches extended to Thelus and Vimy, and the position dominates the southern part of the town. Holding all the heights for more than half a circle around Lens lessens the number of casualties in any dashes toward the town. The place could undoubtedly be taken by assault, but the casualties will be far less from a gradual encirclement, and the result will be just as certain.

Australia Controls Wheat.

LONDON, June 26.—W. A. Holman, the Premier of New South Wales, speaking at a luncheon given in his honor here, said that Australia has taken the whole wheat product under governmental control. At present the country has 4,500,000 tons in excess of home needs, and it will be shipped to England as soon as the transport problem is solved.

The movement of this produce, he declared, promises to be expedited by the new efforts being made by Great Britain and the United States to make sea traffic less perilous.

Pomarice, an accomplice, was sentenced to be shot. Both convicted men were fugitives from Italy.

Running Comments.

A young officer, somewhat affected in style, was explaining to his men what happened to a shell after leaving the gun. The comedian of the company could not refrain from making remarks sotto voce, much to the amusement of his mate. This was part of the lesson. Officer: "After its momentum is expended gravity draws it to earth, otherwise it would keep on for evah and evah." Voice: "Amen!"

Road Warnings.

"Half This Road Is Yours, Half Mine."

This big sign greets the motorist on the splendid stretch of asphalt-macadam between Asheville and Waycross, which is a link of the sectional highway from West San Diego, Cal.

The sign is located at the entrance to the road and is a powerful reminder to drivers to have rights on the road.

A half mile beyond at a sharp bend around the rocky bluff a big sign which is painted a skull and crossbones, with "Just Around the Bend, Drive Slowly," underneath, involuntarily brings the driver to slow speed.—Asheville Board of Trade Bulletin.

Forest Destruction.

Fires and insects are the chief causes of forest destruction, and the States bureau of entomology has issued a list of the most harmful agencies curiously named. Insect-killed sections are the inflammable starting fires. While on the other hand, wounds on trees give a read for boring insects. More timber is lost through fire than through insects.

The Result of Waste.

A single slice of bread seems an unimportant thing. In many households one or more slices of bread daily are thrown away and not used for human food. Sometimes stale quarter—or half—loaves are thrown out. Yet one good-sized slice of bread—such as a child likes to cut—weighs an ounce. It contains almost three-quarters of an ounce of flour.

If every one of the country's 2,000,000 homes wastes on the average only one such slice of bread a day, the country is throwing away daily over 1,500,000 ounces of flour or nearly enough flour for 95,000 one-pound loaves a day.

Fourteen and nine-tenths bushels of wheat on the average are raised per acre. It would take the fruit of some 47,000 acres just to provide a single slice of bread to be wasted daily in every home. To produce this much flour calls for an army of farmers, railway men, flour-mill people. To get the flour to the consumer calls for many freight cars and the use of many tons of coal.

But, some one says, a full slice of bread is not wasted in every home. Very well—make it a daily slice for every four or every ten or every thirty homes—make a weekly or a monthly slice in every home—or make the wasted slice thinner. The waste of flour involved is still appalling—altogether too great to be tolerated when wheat is scarce.

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y. — "For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day. I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I could not walk straight because of the pain in my back and I had pains in my stomach. I went to a doctor and he said I must go under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. I said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation." — Mrs. JOHN A. KOENIG, 502 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Letter after letter comes to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed; or, if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

If you want advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

A Car of Proven Quality

THE Ford car has been on the market twelve years, surely long enough to have proven its high quality. There is nothing experimental about it. Every part has stood the test of time and proven its stability with hard service. No other car has ever approached the durability records of the Ford.

No matter what price you pay for a car you cannot get one with a stancher chassis. Government Laboratory tests have shown that the different parts of the Ford car are superior to those in any other car. Ford Vanadium steel has never been equaled in strength.

If you want a car that can plow through deep mud, sand and gravel—that can cross fields, corduroy roads and ford streams—that can climb the steepest hills with ease—that will give the greatest mileage all year round with the least expense and care—then there is only ONE car for you—The Ford.

The Red Cross Society

Word from Toronto says that money is badly needed for the sick and wounded soldiers; and at a recent meeting of our Society, it was thought advisable to have Tag Day, July 2nd.

We know that all cannot help in this great war, by personal service, but those who are not so privileged, have this opportunity to help by donations of money. As one of the encouraging results of our work, has been the success of our endeavours, we feel confident that Tag Day, July 2nd, will be a grand day financially, and we appeal earnestly to all, to help lighten the burdens of those fighting for our freedom and liberty.

The Ford Coupelet, on which tickets are still being sold, will be at the Park on July 2nd, and the ladies in charge will gladly give tickets to those wishing to help the soldiers in this way.

We are pleased to acknowledge with thanks a donation of $5.00 from Mrs. M. Parrott, Napanee, and $25 from a friend.

The Mite Box Collectors will call the last of the month and on Tuesday July 3rd, the Finance Committee will meet at the home of Mrs C. I. Maybee, at 3.30 p.m.

Owing to the kindness of Mr. Harold Denison, in giving us a donation of $10 one of our Napanee boys confined in a prison camp in Germany, will receive several parcels. The following have been adopting prisoners for over a year, and the Red Cross gratefully acknowledges the kindness: Mr. Checkley, Mr. Brisco, Mrs. F. S. Wartman, Mrs. F. F. Miller, Mrs. H. Daly and Mrs. W. S. Herrington while donations are now being received monthly from Mrs. Geo. Gibbard and Mr. Fred Chinneck. Our monthly cheque for $50 has just been sent to Mrs. Rivers-Buckley, London, Eng., who has charge of the parcels sent to the prisoners.

All are invited to the Hall on Saturday to help with the work planned for the day. Refreshments will be served during the afternoon.

Bicycle Tires.

We have never had as large and varied a stock of tires as this year. The prices are the lowest possible for good goods. Can sell you tires at all prices. W. J. NORMILE.

You reckless men and women are pestered with corns and at least once a week invited death from lockjaw or blisters are now told by a Cincinnati to use a drug called freezezone the moment a few drops a to any corn or callus the sore relieved and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts off with gers.

Freezone dries the moment applied, and simply shrivels the corn without inflaming or even the surrounding tissue or skin. A bottle of freezone will cost at any of the drug stores, but if you rid, one's feet of ever soft corn or hardened callus druggist hasn't any freezone it at any wholesale drug house.

NEWS NOTE

The late Senator Harry Belleville bequeathed large of his more than million dollars to local institutions.

Sir Thomas White says up end of the present year the Canada will have paid, in 1917, $200,000,000. This is surely some.

Since April 14th, 1917, there have been eleven bicycles and one automobile stolen in Belleville. Of bikes and the auto have been recovered by the police.

More than half a million volunteered in the American navy during the period of three months that has elapsed since war was declared.

The motor cars licensed by the province this year number 60,000, an increase which has increased revenue for the government and increased extravagance of the people. An evidence that the sons, generally able-bodied, suffering on account of the war.

Pictou is looking for election. It is said the municipalities of Bloomfield and Wellington, will be permitted during the week of July to prepare for submission to the next election when the by-law receives a vote, as it no doubt will, the Electric Commission will at once proceed to erect a power line point near Trenton through Edward county to Pictou.

The Liberals swept Saskatchewan most clean in Tuesday's election and will have more than fifty-nine seats in the Legislative Assembly. The greater majority than was won by the Scott Government in 1917. Seven Conservatives in the only two are definitely known to be re-elected, V. Loughby, the Opposition leader, and Lieut.-Col. RE MAJOR THE REV. ARTHUR MCGREER FUND

As an erroneous impression may exist in some quarters that owing to the fact of it being impossible for the authorities at Canadian Corps Headquarters to grant Major McGreer the use of a Soup Kitchen for his work behind the lines in France, that for this reason, the idea of assisting him as far as possible has been abandoned; or that the fund for so doing is closed, it is thought advisable to assure the public and his friends wherever situated that this is by no means the case.

On the contrary, we are expecting at any time now, to be asked to forward the fund to him who has done such telling and invaluable work.

We shall, therefore, be much pleased to receive any further donations from Major McGreer's friends, or those interested in his splendid work; which may be sent to the treasurer of the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter, I. O. D. E., Miss Edna Richardson, John Street, Napanee, who will gratefully acknowledge same. We feel that by these means our men on the firing line can be most effectively and quickly helped and ministered to by one who has ever possessed a great attraction and wonderful influence upon all with whom he has come in contact.

Therefore send in your contributions and help swell the fund for Major McGreer's work, which, will go to him as a testimonial of appreciation for what he has been able to do for our boys, and of affectionate regard from his friends and admirers of the County of Lennox and Addington.

Let us make it something worth while!

This week a parcel of twenty-five hand-knitted socks and twenty-five personal property bags have been sent to a Canadian Nurse in a hospital at Rouen, France. Some time ago a most interesting and appreciative letter was received from this lady acknowledging the receipt of a similar parcel in the early spring, which was very welcome and useful.

Remember the days for our work-meetings, Thursdays and Saturdays. Come and help.

HUGE WAR LOAN TOTALS.

New York, June 26.—America's contribution of nearly $3,000,000,000 on the altar of war pales into insignificance when it is placed against the staggering amounts raised by the other belligerent nations.

Revised figures show that, exclusive of the American loan, the nations at war have raised—and virtually expended—a total of $66,521,400,000.

The amounts are as follows:

Great Britain...	21,021,000,000
France...	12,140,000,000
Russia...	8,535,000,000
Italy...	2,845,000,000

MR. BALFOUR'S MESSAGE.

Paid Tribute to the War Work of the Dominion.

It is gratifying to Canadians that Mr. Balfour should first set foot on American soil in Canadian territory;
and they will earnestly hope that before he returns to England he may be able to pay a visit to this country
and give the people an opportunity of testifying in some public way to their profound respect for him. Mr.
Balfour is one of the greatest statesmen produced in the British Empire in many years. One would have to go far back to find one to whom he might be properly likened. He is a man of very genuine culture as well as a statesman. During his brief stay in Canada, Mr. Balfour delivered a message to the Canadian people, which will doubtless pass into the permanent record of our part in the war. The statement is headed:

the permanent record of our part in the war. The statement is headed: "From Mr. Balfour to the Canadian newspapers," and is as follows: "I am glad that, owing to the chances of war, a diplomatic mission from Great Britain to the United States should first set foot upon American soil in Canada, and that it should fall to me, a Scot by birth, as are so many thousands of your fellow-citizens, to bear witness to the heroism and the patient sacrifice of your sons and your daughters.

"The roll of honor of the British Empire has many names upon it which kindle our imagination, and in the mention have power to knit us all together. Upon that roll the names of Ypres and Vimy Ridge will bear witness to the world through history that when the cause was just and the peril great Canada would spare nothing of what in peace time men hold dear.

"I know well that heroism and sacrifice are not confined within the limits of the battlefield. Sir Robert Borden has had a story to tell in Great Britain of effort prodigally offered to the Imperial cause in every township from ocean's coast to ocean's coast, of the prudent counsels of your Provinces and their statesmen in matters of administration and finance, of the contrivance of your men of business, of the munition work that your men and women have performed. Finally, but not least, I would not have forgotten in the Empire the service of Canada to the work of the Red Cross. You have combined to the utmost limit of your powers, energy, and mercy in your prosecution of the war. In times of reconstruction, such as these, they form the only foundation upon which Empires can be built that have any service to offer to mankind. I have been sent upon a mission to your neighboring State. — I think of it as your mission as well as ours—and I trust that a representative from Canada will join me in Washington.

"(Signed) A. J. Balfour."

A Clever Reply.

Mme. de Maintenon once asked Lord Stair why it was that the affairs of government were so badly managed in France under a king and so well managed in England under a queen. "For that very reason," replied the English ambassador, "for when a man reigns the women rule him, and when a woman reigns she is ruled by men."

Sorrow.

Sorrow is not an incident occurring now and then. It is the woof which is woven into the warp of life, and he who has not discerned the divine sacredness of sorrow and the profound meaning which is concealed in pain has yet to learn what life is.—F. W. Robertson.

Sample.

WANTS NO CONSCRIPTION FOR REINFORCEMENTS

A soldiers view of conscription is contained in a letter from Pte. Fred Cowan to a relative, which is published in the Picton Times. He says:

"I am sorry to hear that the Prime Minister speaks of conscription, for it is a shame to think they must do such for all the men they will secure and I have heard the views of more than one Canadian on the subject. They are all strong against it, and a Government which passes it will be short-lived on our return. It is a disgrace to our fallen comrades to be reinforced by conscripts, and I say right here that strange as it may seem, most of the old country fellows are apparently quite delighted with the outlook, whereas their own country has shown a very poor example. Borden may have done some good in London, but I guess they put a lot of queer notions in his head. Would that I were not in the army so I could write some startling facts. How is it that I, a soldier of the original Canadian expeditionary force, cannot get leave to Canada? No, I must spend my time and money amongst strangers, where an officer can have leave every four months and we soldiers once a year if we are lucky. From what I can gather the longer a fellow endures this country the more they expect. I wonder how many of the men who are making so much noise about conscription will come themselves, or have they a son who is of fighting age. We have no say at all. And all we can do is to bear it until we are free, and then watch out; something will happen that will startle you. The Canadian army has some strange individuals in its ranks, and perhaps as much brains as those with all the say. Do not come to the conclusion that I am disheartened. Far from it. I manage as well as the next, but I write under the conditions under which we live."

SPRAY POTATOES FOR BLIGHT.

Nearly everybody has planted potatoes. The cry has been to produce more. But it will be a great loss if the yield of potatoes is reduced by blight and bugs. Both can be easily held in check by spraying the potatoes 2 or 3 times with Bordeaux and a poison.

To make Bordeaux mixture dissolve 4 pounds bluestone (copper sulphate) in warm water and add rainwater to make up 20 gallons. Next dissolve 4 pounds lime in water and add rainwater to make up 20 gallons. You have now a solution of bluestone and one of lime-water. Pour the lime-water into the bluestone solution and mix well. The solution will turn a bright blue color. The mixture is now ready to spray on the potatoes and will prevent blight.

To kill the potato bugs, add 1 pound paris green or 3 pounds arsenate of lead to 40 gallons of Bordeaux mixture.

The potatoes should be sprayed when they are 4 to 6 inches high if the bugs are bad.

The yield of potatoes may easily be doubled by careful spraying. A bulletin on Potato Growing may be obtained on application at the Agricultural Office, Napanee.

OUR OTTAWA LETTER

There may be two opinions about what the Borden Government intends to do with the stuffed club called conscription. The machinery of delay and appeal is so elaborate that it almost defeats the alleged object of the Military Service Act—namely, the prompt reinforcement of the Canadian soldiers at the front.

If a conscript doesn't want to go he can string his protest along through three tribunals, the last being a central appeal Judge, who will hold court at Ottawa. If the method works out as it does in ordinary civil cases where the parties fight it out right up to the Privy Council, it may be for years, and it may be forever, before the reluctant conscript marches away to war. In fact, the war may be over before his case is settled.

These artful provisions for procrastination would seem to show that the Borden Government is about as earnest for genuine conscription as it was for national service via the registration cards. What the Government is mainly concerned in winning is not the war, but an election. Confirmed pessimists say that the Government will pass conscription, have an election and, if they come back, forget all about it. This looks like carrying subterfuge a step too far and one doubts if any Government could be so deceitful. But there is no doubt that conscription is just as much a party manoeuvre as it is a national issue, if not more so. One of its prime objects is to pinch Quebec's tail so that the rest of Canada may mark, learn and digest inwardly.

Quebec's tail, by the way, is composed of Henri Bourassa and Armand Lavergne, the chief allies of the Borden Government in the French province. It is a remarkable tale—this one I am telling—when the tail is pinched it howls. This is a strange thing for a tail to do. Not since Balaam's ass spoke have such prodigies happened. The conscription bill has been delayed on one excuse or another so that the tail-pinching could get into the newspapers.

Conscription would have a more impartial aspect if a millionaire cabinet would sacrifice some of its bonds on the altar of patriotism instead of the children it lacks to send to the war. It would look more impartial, too, if it were not a lop-sided conscription which leaves money, industry, energy, talent and morals untouched. If a sentiment exists against conscription of men it has its root in the feeling that the last thing the Borden Government wants to do is to help the men at the front.

Conscription as it stands in the Military Service Act, to-day, is simply the means of putting the poor man under duress, while leaving the rich man free to continue his pillage. The predatory interests which put the Borden Government in office in 1911 are behind the Borden Government to-day. It is a safe guess that the Borden Government will do nothing to hurt their friends. On the contrary, they will do everything to give them another turn at the trough. And while Big Business plants its whole four feet in the swill the Borden Government will wave the flag to divert attention. The people of Canada will do well to watch the hocus-pocus that goes on under the old flag.

war the soldiers may be divided into two classes—the soldiers who dare and the soldiers who bear. The soldiers who dare are over in France—their quality is courage. The soldiers who bear are here in Canada—their quality is fortitude. In peace we would say that one quality was as good as another, but war may have given them different values. At all events the soldiers who bear have a tough fight. It is they who must bear the assaults of the food exploiters. It is they who realize that the high cost of living and giving their families enough to eat is as bitter a struggle as anything that goes on in Europe.

For the soldiers of toil, the soldiers who stay at home and bear the chief burden of war by way of a forty per cent. tariff on the necessities of life, for the patient masses who send their sons, husbands, fathers, sweethearts to the war, Premier Borden's conscription bill does nothing whatever. The United States when it adopts conscription of life, follows it up with the logical sequel—conscription of the means of living. The United States has already appointed a food dictator with wide powers and is now about to regulate exports with a view to the proper nourishment of the workers at home. Although Premier Borden's conscription bill has been on tapis six weeks now, not a thing has been done to relieve the food situation.

On the contrary the Borden Government has categorically refused to relieve it. Since the conscription bill was first announced by the Borden Government the following things have happened which go to show that the unfortunate consumer is to be skinned alive to the end of the chapter. (1) The Minister of Labor went through the staple articles of food, explaining that in each case the price was reasonable and that nothing could be done to reduce it. Potatoes in food-straitened England cost $2.25 a bag. In Canada they are $4.25 a bag. A four pound loaf made of Canadian flour that has paid freight across the ocean costs 23 cents in England. A three pound loaf costs 24 cents in Canada. Mr. Crothers says nothing can be done about it.

(2) The Finance Minister, speaking for the Government, has rejected resolutions to reduce the tariff, to increase the British Preference, to take off the duty on agricultural implements.

(3) The Government hints at a curtailed franchise and open voting. The Junkers are not all in Germany.

(4) Bacon is now fifty-two cents a pound, and Joseph Wesley Flavell has been made a baronet.

Last week I made a mistake in commenting on the life of the great statesman and financier who has made all succeeding Josephs famous. On looking up my bible I find that Joseph's reputation for virtue rests largely on his behaviour in the affairs of Potiphar's wife, which may have been due to many causes besides goodness. As a food exploiter Joseph was a hard man and ran true to type. The first time the Egyptians came to him for his hoarded corn he took cash. The second time they came he took their notes. The third time they came he took chattel mortgages. And the fourth time they came he took their bodies—in other words, they became the bond slaves of Pharaoh.

A WOMAN CANDIDATE?

Mrs. Walter Scott of Mossley, has the honor of being the first woman in Ontario proposed as a candidate for the legislature. At the East Middlesex Convention her name was proposed but Mrs. Scott in a pleasant speech declined the honor.

As a matter of fact, under the Ontario law to-day, women are not allowed to sit as members of the legislature. Mr. Rowell at the last session of the legislature had a bill, which if passed, would have given woman the right to sit in the legislature as well as to vote for candidates for that body. The government, however, rejected the bill. Mr. Rowell in proposing it showed that in all the western provinces of Canada, Australia and in the States of the Union, where there is woman suffrage, the right of woman to sit in the legislature goes with it. The women do not need to use that right if they do not care to, nor do the people have to elect women if they do run, but at any rate Mr. Rowell contended it was mere justice now that women had the vote, that they should have the right to sit in the legislature as well. Why, on this point should there be discrimination in law between men and women?

Mrs. P. G. Kiely and Mrs. Margaret Hyslop, have been two of the women speakers at Liberal meetings recently.

At the West Wellington meeting in Drayton, Mrs. Kiely, who in Honorary-Secretary of the Ontario Women's Liberal Association, said that even before receiving the vote women, perhaps more than they themselves realized, had been educators of public opinion. Through their influence upon their children and in their homes they had provided that strong driving force behind the law which alone could make legislation effective. "This measure of Woman Suffrage" continued Mrs. Kiely, "which one hears so frequently referred to as 'our right' is in reality a duty which we owe to our newly acquired citizenship and in the discharge of which we must not allow ourselves to be intimidated by those torrents of criticism which will emanate from that class of individuals to whom all innovations are abhorrent."

At Halton, Mrs. Hyslop said that if it was Premier Hearst's government which technically did give Prohibition and Votes for Women, yet it was with the thorough co-operation of the Opposition and further that it was Mr. Rowell and the Liberals who had done the pioneer work for both these reforms and had supported and urged it for years in spite of the Opposition of the government. It was the insistence of the Liberals that caused the government finally to act.

NEW CANDIDATE'S VIEWS.

Lt. Col. Part Robson of Ilderton, organizer and commanding officer of the 135th Battalion, one of the units broken up in England, has been nominated by East Middlesex Provincial Liberals for the legislature. Col. Robson before the war was connected for thirty years with the 26th Regiment. He is a farmer.

E. H. Cleaver, recently nominated by the provincial Liberals of Halton for the legislature, in his speech of acceptance, declared himself for economy, for more adequate taxation of

So many cases of heat-stroke that voyage, and the appliances—nothing short of Repeatedly is the question "Why haven't we a supply?" To meet this the authorities feebly, erecting a few plants to-day cannot turn out what is needed. There is why these boats cannot with ice-chests, dispense proper cooking appliances summer, should the can continue, as it probably will vital necessities will still

To meet this ice question plants have been built ten times as many are required to cooking arrangements river steamers, fires have on the stern of the barge kind permission of the ship's galley may be used would suffice were there men to cook for, but when 150 to 200 each trip do sick men—well—! 1000 men have been placed on boats as an experiment, I do little under the circumstances and the work thus devolves on other men. However great difficulties confront them, and the writer does not feel too critical.

Always the cry is for more doctors. One would think they are coming from the officer at the front is so inclined to forget the needs of the people at home. But, and there are young doctors who should be out in the field there are experienced men here and in France who should be home. In alluding to homes, please don't forget to think the writer refers to working at home in continental large hospitals, nor to have returned from the front he aims at the men who have been within the past years, and who, appearing all sense of shame, should grab the other fellows' jobs.

RESTORING FRENCH LAND.

Our Soldiers Were Among the Men
in Khaki Who Became Farmers.

The beginning of spring this year
has produced the spectacle of thousands of soldiers of the French army,
together with their comrades of the British and Belgian armies, forsaking the rifle, the bayonet, the hand-grenade, and the machine-gun to take in hand temporarily the hoe, the spade, the harrow, and the plow in many of the districts of eastern and north-eastern France.

The reconquest of large tracts of territory from the Germans and the return of the civilian inhabitants
from the places where they had taken refuge confronted the authorities with the problem of restoring these lands to cultivation. Farming implements to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars, it was found had been damaged or destroyed since the beginning of the war in what is known as the zone of the armies." The young peasants were all serving in the ranks and the older men, even with the aid of the women and children, were unable to fill their places
for the proper cultivation of the land.

The army decided to step into the breach. The greatest proportion of the soldiers in the French ranks come from the peasant or farming class. It was therefore an easy task to find capable hands. The organization was more difficult, but co-ordination between the civil and military authorities was affected very rapidly. A military officer with agricultural experience was appointed by each army to consult with the prefects of the departments in which the troops were stationed and to find out what work was to be done and how many hands were required to do it.

The zone occupied by each army
was subdivided into small districts, each containing about 25 villages or hamlets. The commanding officer of the troops stationed in each district was directed to get into touch with the civil official and place at his disposal as many men as were needed or could be spared for agricultural labor.

The artillery and engineering repair shops of the army were ordered to mend damaged farm implements
and replace missing parts, and army farriers to shoe free of charge all horses working on the land.

The result of these arrangements
is that, almost up to the firing line,
all available land in France is now
in cultivation, and soldiers in uniform, whenever they can be spared from the trenches and dugouts and their main task of destroying the Germans, work cheerfully with the women, children, and older men behind the lines.

The system has been extended to that part of the line—150 miles in length—held by the British and Belgians, but here the task is a more difficult one, as most of the northern allies are, in civil life, engaged in industrial work in the cities. The Canadians and Australians, however,
have been of immense assistance in restoring French land to productiveness.

GIFT OF THE GAB.

Why Stephenson Thought There Was
No Power to Equal It.

When George Stephenson, the per-fector of the locomotive, was visiting the seat of Sir Robert Peel at Drayton on one occasion, says the writer of "Famous British Engineers," there happened to be present Dr. Buckland,
the scientist, and Sir William Follett,
the famous advocate.

Stephenson discussed with Dr. Buckland one of his favorite theories as to the formation of coal and, though undoubtedly in the right, was ultimately vanquished by the arguments and oratory of the doctor, who was a better
master of tongue fence than himself.
Next morning while pondering over his defeat in the solitude of the garden he was accosted by Sir William Follett and confided to that gentleman the story of his failure.

Sir William, acquainted with the details of the matter in dispute, agreed to take up the case and soon afterward attacked Dr. Buckland on the subject. A long discussion ensued, in which the man of law completely silenced the man of science, who was at last compelled to own himself vanquished. Sir Robert Peel, highly amused at this example of "tit for tat," then turned to the inventor and inquired, with a laugh:

"And what do you say on this matter, Mr. Stephenson?"

"Why," he replied, "I will only say this—that of all the powers above and under the earth there seems to me no power equal to the gift of the gab."

be a feature of the tall rairs. From the dugouts of Vimy ridge and from prisoners taken there were obtained many letters, diaries, and other documents indicating the efficiency of our preparatory artillery fire, as well as the accuracy of our information on which it was based. Some of these have been translated. They prove that the enemy had heavy losses in man and material before the infantry were loosed upon him, and that even more serious was his loss of confidence as he saw his trenches blown away and his guns buried.

"Hell is let loose." In this phrase a German gunner chronicled on March 31st the opening of our artillery attack.

The record of a trench mortar battery shows that day after day the mortars were buried. Day after day the patient gunners dug out their weapons only to have them buried again deeper than before. In despair, the day before the assault, a gunner writes:

"Everything is buried, the entrance to our shelter, the gun emplacements, the whole trench ammunition supply and fuses—all buried."

Just before the assault an infantryman made this record:

"Nobody imagines how frantic it is here. It is almost worse than the Somme. There is no longer a trench; only shellholes and mine craters. Losses on losses. We are now only a third, and two-thirds are missing. Here one can only give up hope, as if this lasts a fortnight longer nothing will remain of the division, and one is up to the middle in mud and filth. One almost despairs, but there is nothing one can do, unless one wishes to ———." Here the diary ends.

Nursed Her Brother.

A cablegram received by an Owen Sound friend conveyed the information of a curious coincidence met by Miss Mary Pollock, who, with other nurses, had been assigned to duty at Orpington Hospital. The first patient that she was sent to attend proved to be her brother, Pte. Stewart Pollock, whom she did not know had been wounded. Pte. Pollock enlisted with a Western battalion and had been in the trenches for several months. Frequent letters from him intimated that he had escaped the casualty list, in which he regarded himself as being exceedingly fortunate, considering all he had come through. The surprise of Miss Pollock can be imagined when meeting her brother in the hospital, as this was the first time in several years.

The proprietor's busy air fell from him, and he sat down on the edge of one of the canvas bunks.

"I thought you boys were from the mines," said he. "Your friend here fooled me." He pointed his thumb at Yank. "He looks like an old timer. But now I look at you I see you're greenhorns. Just get here today? Have a smoke?"

He produced a handful of cigars, of which he lit one.

"We just arrived," said Talbot, somewhat amused at this change. "How about that second story?"

"I want to tell you boys a few things," said the proprietor. "I get $60,000 a year rent for that second story just as she stands. That tent next door belongs to my brother-in-law. It is just 15 by 25 feet, and he rents it for $40,000."

"Gamblers," inquired Talbot.

"You've guessed it. So you see I ain't got any beds to speak of down there. In fact, here's the whole layout."

"But we can't stand $6 a night for these things," expostulated Johnny. "Let's try over at the other place."

"Try ahead, boys," said the proprietor quite good naturedly. "You'll find her the same over there and everywhere else." He arose. "Best leave your plunder here until you find out. Come down and have a drink?"

CHAPTER VIII.

Start to Make Money.

WE found the City hotel offered exactly the same conditions as did the Parker House, except that the proprietor was curt and had no time for us at all. From that point, still dissatisfied, we extended our investigations beyond the Plaza. We found ourselves ankle deep in sandhills on which grew coarse grass and a sort of sage. Crazy, ramshackle huts made of all sorts of material were perched in all sorts of places. Hundreds of tents had been pitched, beneath which and in front of which an extremely simple housekeeping was going in. Hunt as we might we could find no place that looked as though it would take lodgers. Most of even the better looking houses were simply tiny skeletons covered with paper, cloth or paint. By painstaking persistence we kept at it until we had inquired of every building of any pretensions. Then, somewhat discouraged, we picked our way back to the shore after our heavier goods.

"We've got to rustle up $220 each."

Frank and me to death. There's our total assets," said Talbot and laid a ten dollar gold piece and a dime on his knee.

"We'll call that dime a curiosity," said he, "for I notice a quarter is the smallest coin they use out here. Now you see that we've got to talk business. Frank and I haven't got enough to live on for one more day."

"There's enough among us"—began Yank.

"You mean you already have your share of the partnership finances," corrected Talbot quickly. "If we're going to be partners, and that's desired and understood, I suppose—we all nodded emphatic agreement—"we must all put in the same amount. I move that said amount be $220 apiece. Yank, you can loaf tomorrow. You've got your share all made up. You can put in the day finding out all about getting to the mines and how much it costs and what we will need."

"All right; I'll do it," said Yank.

"As for the rest of us," cried Talbot, "we've got to rustle up $220 each before tomorrow evening!"

"How?" I asked blankly.

"How should I know? Out there"—he waved his hand abroad at the flickering lights—"there is the Golden City, challenging every man as he enters her gates. She offers opportunity and fortune. All a man has to do is go and take them! Accept the challenge!"

"The only way I could take them ican wagon in town. Brought it out from New York in pieces and put it together himself. Broke four wild California mules to drag her. He's a wonder!"

I could not then see quite how this exploit made him such a wonder, but on a sudden inspiration I splashed out through the mud and climbed into the wagon.

McGlynn looked back at me.

"Freightin'," said he, "is $20 a ton, and at that rate it'll cost you about $30, you dirty hippopotamus. These ain't no safe movers, these mules!"

Unmoved, I clambered up beside him.

"I want a job," said I, "for today only."

"Do ye now?"

"Can you give me one?"

"I can, mebbe. And do you understand the inner aspirations of mules, mebbe?"

"I was brought up on a farm."

"And the principles of elementary navigation by dead reckoning?"

I looked at him blankly.

"I mean mudholes," he explained. "Can you keep out of them?"

"I can try."

He pulled up the team, handed me the reins and clambered over the wheel.

"You're hired. At 6 o'clock I'll find you and pay you off. You get $25."

"What am I to do?"

"You go to the shore, and you rustle about whenever you see anything that looks like freight, and you look at it, and when you see anything marked with a diamond and an H inside of it you pile it on and take it up to Howard Mellin & Co. And if you can't lift it, then leave it for another trip, and bullyrag those skindints at H. M. & Co.'s to send a man down to help you."

"What's that, John?" inquired a cool, amused voice.

McGlynn and I looked around. A tall, perfectly dressed figure stood on the sidewalk surveying us quizzically. This was a smooth shaven man of perhaps thirty-five years of age, grave faced, clean cut, with an air of rather ponderous, slow dignity that nevertheless became his style very well. He was dressed in tall white hat, a white winged collar, a black stock, a long tailed blue coat with gilt buttons, an embroidered white waistcoat, dapper buff trousers and varnished boots. He carried a polished cane and wore several heavy pieces of gold jewelry—a watch fob, a scarfpin, and the like. His movements were leisurely, his voice low. It seemed to me then that somehow the perfection of his appointments and the calm deliberation of his movement made him more incongruous and remarkable than did the most bizarre whims of the miners.

"Is it yourself, Judge Girvin?" re-

The proprietor of the Parker House greeted us with unabated good nature. "I know how you boys feel," said he. "There's lots in your fix. You'd better stick here tonight and then get organized to camp out if you're going to be here long. I suppose, though, you're going to the mines. Well, it'll take you several days to make your plans and get ready. When you get back from the mines you won't have to think about these things."

"There's plenty of gold?" ventured Johnny.

"Bushe's."

"I should think you'd be up there."

"I don't want any better gold mine than the old Parker House," said he comfortably.

We paid him $24.

By now it was late in the afternoon. The wind had dropped, but over the hills to seaward rolled a soft beautiful bank of fog. The sun was blotted out behind it, and a chill fell. The crowds about the Plaza thinned.

We economized our best at supper, but had to pay some $8 for the four of us. The bill was a la carte and contained such items as grizzly steak, antelope, elk and wild duck and goose. Grizzly steak, I remember, cost a dollar and a quarter. By the time we had finished it had grown dark. The lamps were alight, and the crowds were beginning to gather. All the buildings and the big tent next door were a blaze of illumination. The sounds of music and singing came from every side. A holiday spirit was in the air.

Johnny and I were crazy to be up and doing, but Talbot sternly repressed us, and Yank agreed with his decision by an unusually emphatic nod.

"It is all a lot of fun, I'll admit," said he, "but this is business, and we've got to face it. Sit down here on the edge of this veranda, and let's talk things over. How much money have you got, Yank?"

"Two hundred and twenty dollars," replied Yank promptly.

"You're partners with me, Frank, so I know our assets," said Talbot with tact. "Johnny?"

"Hanged if I know," replied that youth. "I've got quite a lot. I keep it in my pack."

"Well, go find out," advised Talbot.

Johnny was gone for some time. He smoked and listened to the rather blatantly mingled strains of music and watched the figures of men hurrying by in the spangled darkness.

Johnny returned very much excited. "I've been robbed!" he cried.

"Robbed? Is your money all gone?"

"No; there's a little left, but"—Talbot laughed quietly.

"Sit down, Johnny, and cool off," he advised. "If anybody had robbed you they'd have taken the whole kit and kaboodle. Did you come out ahead on those monte games?"

Johnny blushed and laughed a little. "I see what you're at, but you're away off there. I just played for small stakes."

"And lost a lot of them. I sort of look out your game. But that's all right. How much did the 'robbers' leave you?"

"Twelve dollars besides what I have in my clothes, $21 in all," said Johnny.

"Well, that's pretty good. You beat ner gates. She offers opportunity and fortune. All a man has to do is go and take them! Accept the challenge!"

"The only way I could take them would be to lift them off some other fellow at the point of a gun," said Johnny gloomily.

We talked the situation over thoroughly and then turned in, having lost our chance to see the sights. Beneath us and in the tent next door went on a tremendous row of talking, laughing and singing that for a little while prevented me from falling asleep. But the last month had done wonders for me in that way, and shortly I dropped off.

Hours later I awakened, shivering with cold, to find the moonlight pouring into the room and the bunks all occupied. My blanket had disappeared, which accounted for my dreams of icebergs. At first I felt inclined to raise a row, then thought better of it and by careful manipulation abstracted two good blankets from the most unprotected of my neighbors and soon slept soundly.

We went downstairs and out into the sweetest of mornings. The sun was bright, the sky clear and blue. The wind had not yet risen; balmy warmth showered down through every particle of the air. I had felt some May days like this back on our old farm. Somehow they were associated in my mind with Sunday morning and the drawing, lazy clucking of hens. Only here there were no hens, and if it was Sunday morning—which it might have been—nobody knew it.

We ate a frugal breakfast and separated on the agreed business of the day. Yank started for the waterfront to make inquiries as to ways of getting to the mines, Talbot set off at a businesslike pace for the hotel as though he knew fully what he was about, Johnny wandered rather aimlessly to the east, and I as aimlessly to the west.

It took me just one hour to discover that I could get all of any kind of work that any dozen men could do and at wages so high that at first I had to ask over and over again to make sure I had heard aright. Only none of them would bring me in $220 by evening. The further I looked into that proposition the more absurd, of course, I saw it to be. I could earn from $20 to $50 by plain day labor at some jobs, or I could get fabulous salaries by the month or year, but that was different. After determining this to my satisfaction I came to the sensible conclusion that I would make what I could.

The first thing that caught my eye after I had come to this decision was a wagon drawn by four mules coming down the street at a slow walk. The sight did not impress me particularly, but every storekeeper came out from his shop and every passerby stopped to look with respect as the outfit wallowed along. It was driven by a very large, grave, blond man with a twinkle in his eye.

"That's John A. McGlynn," said a man next my elbow.

"Who's he?" I asked.

The man looked at me in astonishment.

"Don't know who John McGlynn is?" he demanded. "When did you get here?"

"Last night."

"Oh! Well, John has the only Amer-

plied McGlynn. "I'm just telling this young man that he can't have the job of driving my little California canaries for but one day because I've hired a fine lawyer from the east at $275 a month to drive my mules for me."

"You have done well," said Judge Girvin in his grave, courteous tones. "For the whole business of a lawyer is to know how to manage mules and asses so as to make them pay."

I enjoyed my day hugely. My eminent position on the driver's seat—eminent both actually and figuratively—gave me a fine opportunity to see the sights and to enjoy the homage men seemed inclined to accord the only wagon in town. The feel of the warm air was most grateful. Such difficulties as offered served merely to add zest to the job. At noon I ate some pilot bread and a can of sardines bought from my employers. About 2 o'clock the wind came up from the sea and the air filled with the hurrying clouds of dust.

At 5 o'clock a small boy boarded me. "You're to drive the mules up to McGlynn's and unhitch them and leave them," said he. "I'm to show you the way."

"Where's McGlynn?" I asked.

"He's getting his mail."

CHAPTER IX.

We Compare Notes.

WE found McGlynn in line about a block down the street. When he saw me coming he pulled a fat buckskin bag from his breeches pocket, opened its mouth and shook a quantity of its contents by guess into the palm of his hand.

"There you are," said he; "that's near enough. I'm a pretty good guesser. I hope you took care of the mules all right. You ought to, you're from a farm."

"I fixed 'em."

"And the mud? How many times did you get stuck?"

"Not at all."

He looked at me with surprise.

"Would you think of that now?" said he. "You must have loaded her light."

"I did."

"Did you get all the goods over?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'll acknowledge you're a judgmatical young man, and if you want a job with me I'll let that lawyer go I spoke to the judge about. He handed it to me then, didn't he?" He laughed heartily. "No? Well, you're right. A man's a fool to work for any one but himself. Where's your bag? Haven't any? How do you carry your dust? Haven't any? I forgot; you're a tenderfoot, of course." He opened

"About the same."

"Depends, then, on whether horses

yer for $250 a month, and the lawyer was inclined to take him up. After they had gone on I paced off the hole
just for fun. It was twelve feet square by about six feet deep. Then I walked on down toward the water front and talked with all the storekeepers. They do a queer business. All these goods
we see around came out here on consignment. The local storekeepers have a greater or lesser share and sell mainly on commission. Since they haven't any adequate storehouses and can't get any put up again, they sell the stuff mainly at auction and get rid of it as quickly as possible. That's why some things are so cheap they can make pavements of them when a ship happens to come in loaded with one article.
I talked with some of them and told them they ought to warehouse
a lot of this stuff so as to keep it over until the market steadied. They agreed with that, but pointed out that they were putting up warehouses as fast as they could, which wasn't very fast,
and in the meantime the rains and dust were destroying their goods. It was cheaper to sell at auction."

Johnny. "I went to one of them."

"Then you didn't raise your $10,000 from them in advance payments!" I marveled.

"Certainly not. That would have scared off the whole lot of them. But I got their agreements. I told you it took me two hours. Then I walked up the street figuring where I'd get the money. Of course I saw I'd have to divide the profits. I didn't know anybody, but after awhile I decided that the best chance was to get some advice from an honest and disinterested man. So I asked the first man I met who ran the biggest gambling place
in town. He told me Jim Recket."

"Jim Recket?" I echoed. "He's the man I was to leave change for my gold slug with."

"Recket keeps the El Dorado, next

a very quiet, direct, square sort of a fellow. The best type of professional

I hired a boat for $5 and rowed out to some of the ships. Believe me or not, most of them were empty, not even a watchman aboard. I found some of the captains, however, and talked with each of them. They all told the same story."

"What do you mean?" asked Johnny blankly.

"Would you have been willing to have dropped out of this partnership?" Johnny stared.

"I mean," said Talbot kindly, "that you had no right to try to get this money by merely a gambler's chance unless you were willing to accept the logical result if you failed. It isn't fair to the rest of us."

"I see what you mean," said Johnny slowly. "No; I hadn't thought of it that way."

"Well, as I said, you had luck," repeated Talbot cheerfully, "so we needn't think of it further." It was characteristic that Johnny took this veiled rebuke from Talbot Ward in a meek and chastened spirit. From any one else his high temper could never stand even a breath of criticism. "How about you, Frank?" Talbot asked me.

I detailed my experiences in a very few words and exhibited my gold slug. "That's the best I can do," I ended, "and half of that does not belong to me. I can, however, in a few days scrape up the full amount. There is plenty to do here. And, barring bull luck, like Johnny's, I don't see much show of beating that unless a man settled down to stay here."

Talbot stared at me ruminatively until I began to get restive; then he withdrew his eyes. He made no comment. "I suppose you have your money," suggested Yank to him after a pause.

"Oh, yes," said Talbot as though awaking from profound reverie. "Well, tell us about it. How did you get it? How long did it take you?"

"About half an hour. I figured that everybody in a place like this would be wanting news. So I sorted out that bundle of old newspapers you fellows were always laughing at, and I went out and sold them."

"How much did you get for them?" asked Johnny.

"A dollar apiece for most and 50 cents for the rest. I came out $270 ahead, all told. That, with Frank's and my $10, gave me $30 above the necessary amount."

Johnny arose and kicked himself solemnly.

"For not guessing what newspapers were good for," he explained. "Go on! What next? What did you do with the rest of the day?"

CHAPTER X. Talbot Deserts.

TALBOT leaned forward, and all the animation of the dinner table returned to his manner and to his face.

"Boys," said he earnestly, "this is the most wonderful town that has ever been! There has been nothing like it in the past, and there will never be anything like it again. After I had sold out my papers I went wandering across the Plaza with my hands in my pockets. Next the El Dorado there is a hole in the ground. It isn't much of a hole, and the edges are all caving in because it is sandy. While I was looking at it two men came along. One was the owner of the hole, and the other said he was a lawyer. The owner offered to rent the hole to the law-

And a heap more exciting," put in Johnny. "I went to one of them."

"Well, I wandered down to the shore and looked out over the bay. It was full of shipping, riding high at anchor. I had an idea. I hired a boat for $5 and rowed out to some of the ships. Believe me or not, most of them were empty, not even a watchman aboard. I found some of the captains, however, and talked with each of them. They all told the same story."

"Crew skipped to the mines, I suppose," said Yank.

"Exactly. And they couldn't get any more. So I offered to hire a few of them."

"The captains?" I inquired.

"No; the ships."

"The what?" we yelled in chorus.

"The ships."

"But if the captains can't get crews—"

"Ah. I don't want to sail them," went on Talbot impatiently. "It was hard work getting them to agree. They all cherished notions they could get crews and go sailing some more—good old salts! But I hired four at last. Had to take them for only a month, however, and had to pay them in advance five hundred apiece."

"I beg your pardon," said Johnny softly, "for interrupting your pleasing tale, but the last item interested me. I do not know whether I quite heard it right."

"Oh, shut up, Johnny!" said Yank. "Let the man tell his story. Of course

"In two hours I had contracts with twelve of them."

he didn't have the money in his pocket. How did you get it, Tal?"

Ward shot him a grateful glance. "I told them I'd pay them at 4 o'clock which gave me plenty of time."

"Two thousand dollars—oh, of course!" murmured Johnny.

"So then," continued Talbot, "I hustled ashore and went to see some of my merchant friends. In two hours I had contracts with twelve of them that totaled $6,000."

"Why didn't some of them go out and hire ships on their own account?" asked Yank shrewdly.

"Because I didn't mention the word 'ship' until I had their business," said Talbot. "I just guaranteed them storage, waterproof, practically fireproof, dustproof and within twenty-four hours. I guess most of them thought I was crazy, but as it didn't cost them time, no gold mining fever, plenty of nerve and a broad mind. Can you tell me who he is?"

"He thought a minute and then answered direct, as I knew he would."

"Sam Brannan," he said.

"Tell me about him."

"To take up your points," said Reck- et, checking off his fingers, "he came out with a shipload of Mormons as their head, and he collected tithes from them for over a year. That's your idle money. He has all the time the Lord stuck into one day at a clip. That's your 'some time.' He has been here in the city since '48, which would seem to show he doesn't care much for mining. He collected the tithes from those Mormons and sent word to Brigham Young that if he wanted the money to come and get it. That's for your nerve. As for being broad minded—well, when a delegation of the Mormons, all ready for a scrap, came to him solemnly to say that they were going to refuse to pay him the tithes any more, even if he was the California head of the church, he laughed them off the place for having been so green as to pay them as long as they had."

"I found Sam Brannan finally at the bar in Dennison's Exchange."

POLITENESS IN PORTUGAL.

Ceremony With Which a Visitor Is Greeted and Dismissed.

That Portuguese politeness is most ceremonial and may proceed to an extraordinary extent is indicated in the case, say, of a visit to a high dignitary.

The caller ascends a magnificent staircase, passes through a long suit of rooms to the apartment in which the dignitary is seated. He is received with many bows and smiles.

When the visit is concluded the caller bows and prepares to depart. When he reaches the door he must, according to the invariable custom of the country, make another salutation. He then discovers that his host is following him and that the inclination is returned by one equally profound. When the caller arrives at the door of the second apartment the dignitary is standing on the threshold of the first, and the same ceremony is again passed between them. When the third apartment is gained the caller observes that his host is occupying the place the caller has just left in the second. The same civilities are then renewed, and these polite reciprocations are continued until the caller has traversed the whole suit of apartments.

At the balustrade the caller makes a bow and as he supposes a final salutation. But no; when he has reached the first landing place the host is at the top of the stairs; when the caller stands on the second landing place his host has descended to the first, and upon each of these occasions their heads wag with increasing humility. Finally the journey to the foot of the stairs is accomplished.

HEIFER'S FIRST CALF.

Careful Handling Necessary at This Critical Period.

The first parturition is a critical period with the heifer because at this time she may be easily spoiled, writes a correspondent of the Iowa Homestead. Some of the worst kickers I have ever known have been made so by being handled in a wrong manner during the first lactation. I have broken a good many heifers to milk desirable to start the milk of the sow too rapidly, as it might be more than the little pigs would need, and if it is not all drawn out of the udder it is liable to congest and cause trouble not only to the sow, but to the pigs in the form of scours. It requires caution, therefore, in the start not to push the sow with feed that will start up the milk too rapidly. If the litter is a small one more time should be taken in getting the sow on full feed than otherwise. But the demands of the pigs will increase every day, and it will not be long until they will be able to take about all the milk their mother will furnish from the best quality of feed.

Care must be taken at all times not to overfeed, however. A practical method of feeding a sow with young pigs is to allow her at regular times night and morning just what she will eat up perfectly clean and still want a little more. This method of feeding will retain the sow's appetite and keep her in a good, healthy condition. The sow does not demand a fattening ration, such as an all corn one, but she requires a milk producing protein ration. The farmer who produces a large quantity of separator or skim milk daily has one of the best feeds for sows with young pigs to be found, when the milk is combined with ground grains and mixed into a thick slop. Access to a growing pasture as soon as pasture is available will help greatly to keep the sow's bowels regular as well as adding to her appetite and assisting in the furnishing of milk for the pigs.

HANDLING HEIFERS.

Lack of Training Spoils Many Prospective Milk Makers.

All young things require training and none more than young heifers. In fact, the treatment a heifer receives as she is growing into cowhood often has much to do with her value as a cow, says the Farm Journal.

First, of course, she should be treated kindly and should by all means be accustomed to having people about her. Never turn heifers into a back pasture or leave them unhandled in sheds with self feeders for months. A heifer should be smoothed, carded, given tidbits, talked to and in every way made to feel that the approach of man is not to be feared.

Kindness is a first essential. Let the buyer of a wild, panicky heifer lose no time in courting and winning her attention and affection. Then when the young cow has milk she will be ready for milking. She should at this time receive much caressing and petting and be made to feel that she is of consequence. Upon sitting down to her the first few times do not begin milking suddenly and harshly, but slowly, waiting for her to become accustomed to it.

The Young Calf.

The first few weeks of its life the calf will suck its dam ten to fifteen times daily under natural conditions. It is impossible to feed calves by hand more than two or three times daily. If it is possible the calves should receive three feedings per day during the first three or four weeks, after which time two feedings per day are sufficient.

THE SCILLY ISLANDS.

Washed by a Glutton Sea Gorged With Human Victims.

No more sinister locality could be found for the sinking of a vessel in a submarine crusade than the neighborhood of the Scilly Islands, where a number have met their fate. It has been said that a large bagful of pieces of granite of different sizes thrown indiscriminately into a small shallow pool of water will give a tolerably correct model of the islands of Scilly. They are seventeen in number, varying in extent from ten to 1,640 acres, besides twenty-two smaller islets and numerous naked rocks. They are located in latitude 50, longitude 7, about twenty-five miles west by south from Land's End, Cornwall, England. Those who recall the scenic effects in "The Pirates of Penzance" retain some idea of the nature of the Scillonian panorama—wild and picturesque, sheer cliffs and yawning caverns hollowed out by the ceaseless action of the ocean waves, a perilous approach in stormy weather.

In earlier days the islands were infested with pirates and smugglers, while many of the inhabitants picked up a living as wreckers. It was on Gilston rock that Sir Cloudesley Shovel perished with 800 men in 1707, and in the graveyard of St. Mary's repose the bodies of 311 victims of the wreck of the Schiller in 1875. So treacherous is the sea in these parts that there is an old proverb that for every man who dies a natural death the sea takes nine.

As for the strategic importance of Scilly, Borlase wrote over a century and a half ago: "In time of war it is of the utmost importance to England to have Scilly in its possession. If it were in an enemy's hands the channel trade from Ireland, Liverpool and Bristol to London and the south of England could not subsist, for Scilly, lying at the point of England, commands both channels."—Bulletin of the National Geographic Society.

THE OWL FAMILY.

Not All of These Birds Are Nocturnal.

Most of our owls are rather common, but being generally nocturnal and wary and inhabiting by preference those districts far from human habitations, they are more rarely observed. With keen attention to all of the details of plumage, form, flight, etc., one may pretty nearly be sure of all of the following species:

The screech owl is the size of a pigeon, but stouter; head with ear tufts, tail with dark cross bands; flies only at night; common everywhere; familiar call.

The Arcadian or saw-whet owl is smaller than a pigeon; head with no ear tufts; tail with white cross bars; rather common in the Middle West; cry like name.

The pygmy owl is no larger than a robin; but more fluffy; no tufts on head; tail with white spots; common in the Rocky Mountains and to the Pacific Coast; flies in daytime.

The burrowing owl is about the body size of a pigeon; no ear tufts on head; digs holes; lives in prairie-dog towns; flies in daytime; white bars on tail.

The long-eared owl is a little smaller than a crow, or shorter; head with long ear tufts; tail closely barred with rufous and brown; not

PICTURES OF V

Interesting Collection of Canadian Record O

A very interesting collection of pictures is now touring the of Canada. The pictures loaned by the War Record and they are intended people of this country as it really is. The series of pictures will be arranged the Dominion by an office is possible that the post offered later on to a returned soldier. The pictures are large, and they have a great deal of detail which can be studied. There are over a hundred photographs in the collection and a haphazard selection of them would be sufficient to press a multitude of subjects with the tremendous size of the subject and secondly wonderful quality of the art which the pictures of the pictures were all made from a few models. The subjects testify to the run by the photographer them. There is none of the obscurity which betrays the telescope lens and the pictures for enlarging the original perfected to a point which is possible for the spectator sized men clambering over and clearly distinguish the mingled lines of their feet.

CLEAN MILKING SUITS AID IN THE PRODUCTION OF CLEAN MILK.

and have never spoiled any of them. The person who does the milking at this time should have infinite patience and forbearance. He knows the heifer is pretty sure to kick when he goes to milk her, and he must not permit the fact of the kicking to excite him in the least. I have always followed the practice of standing by her side trying to milk her with one hand and caressing her with the other. The milk is a secondary consideration, and it does not matter if it goes on the ground. The chief point is to accustom the heifer to being milked.

When the heifer sees that her kicking does no good she will little by little give it up. But the milker generally gets several kicks before this stage is reached. His compensation comes afterward in having a cow that never kicks. As I have never failed to attain that end, I have great faith in the process.

Those who have had experience in that end, I have great faith in the process.

Those who have had experience in handling dairy cows know that until about the fourth week after calving the cow does not come to her highest and best flow of milk. During these first few weeks of the lactation period I do not give her all she will eat, and a part of the ration is of a laxative nature. I usually place her on full feed at the end of a month, at which time the flow of milk is generally at its best.

The heifer, however, with her first calf may not come to her fullest and best flow until the fifth or sixth week after calving, owing to the fact that bringing forth young for the first time is a more severe physical strain than later in life; hence a longer time for recovery from the weakness caused by gestation will be required. For this reason the heifer coming fresh should be fed more carefully than older animals at the same period. When the heifer has reached the point of giving her fullest flow of milk I feed her with the idea of keeping her milk flow up through the dry time of summer and well toward the time when she will drop the second calf.

The pasture in which the heifer is kept should have good fences. This will prevent her from learning breachiness. A cow kept in a pasture that is poorly fenced will acquire the habit of getting out much more quickly than when kept under proper conditions.

AROUND THE FARM.

Sweet clover on that patch of wornout land or on that run down pasture may surprise you. Have you taken that annual farm inventory yet? It should be taken before the spring rush begins.

Before the days of railroads there were more home grown things on the family table than there are today. During the present year there may be fewer vegetable dishes on family tables unless there are more and larger home gardens planted this spring.

Keen disappointment is likely to be experienced by farmers who plant a greatly increased acreage to cabbages in 1917, even though present prices have reached the unprecedented level of $150 to $175 a ton. This is the opinion of J. R. Helper, specialist in vegetables and truck growing at the College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin.

THE FARROWING SOW.

Care Should Be Exercised Not to Overfeed Her at This Time.

The sows should be placed in their individual quarters at least a week before due to farrow in order that they may become accustomed to their new quarters, writes W. F. Pardue in Kimball's Dairy Farmer. Quietness and but little feed is needed by the sow for the first twenty-four hours after farrowing. Water with the chill removed and a little middlings stirred in it is all that she needs in any case. It is not three feedings per day during the first three or four weeks, after which time two feedings per day are sufficient.

Grain For the Calf.

Grain for calves should be furnished in separate feed boxes placed so that it cannot be soiled by the droppings of the calf, but at the same time where the calf can get at it readily. There should be no corners in which wet feeds may ferment, and the utmost care should be taken to keep the grain fresh and clean at all times.

Feed Calves Regularly.

Calves should be fed sweet milk of a uniform temperature and should not receive as much milk as they can drink. All calves should be fed regularly. Very young calves should be fed three times a day.

Hurrah for Cider.

There is an old-fashioned song about the "prettiest girl you ever saw, sucking cider through a straw, over the garden wall." In the period of the vintage of the song, sweet cider was a beverage in which the lads and lassies on the farm, rather than adults in the rural districts or in cities, took an interest, but with prohibition spreading throughout Canada the people of the Dominion will be singing the praises of cider as a supplanter of alcoholic beverages.

Cider is from all standpoints a most satisfactory irrigant of throats. It is to near beer what champagne is to ditchwater. It has flavor and bouquet, and the zippy tang that men, especially, require in a drink. To be sure, cider can be perverted to such baleful forms as applejack and Jersey lightning, and men can put it in their mouths to steal away their brains, as they did a while back with similarly corrupted extracts of rye and malt. But this sort of abuse of the apple's sweet juice advertises itself too easily. By its works ye shall know it, and so shall the officers of the law, and the heavy hand of justice shall smite the hardeners of soft cider.

Cider should never be served stingily. It should be lavished from large pitchers, poured into capacious flagons, and imbibed in hearty drafts. Cider partakes of the whole-sale personality of brown October ale, and has the added virtue of not confusing the footsteps of the drinker. Whenever possible, cider should be consumed as it comes from the press. When it is watered by unscrupulous vendors, or doctored with preservative compounds, it loses its distinctive charm.

The sale of cider as a popular beverage should serve to stimulate apple growing, and if an apple a day keeps the doctor away, a jug of cider should be the cheapest form of health insurance.

Great Forest Resources.

Ontario is one of Canada's largest lumber-producing provinces. Its productive forest area is 70,000,000 to 90,000,000 acres, containing approximately 150,000,000 feet board measure of marketable timber. Quebec has from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 acres of saw timber, the species present being the same as in Ontario, as far as conifers are concerned. The province has 160,000,000,000 feet of saw timber. Quebec produces the largest quantity of spruce while Ontario produces the most white pine.

smaller than a crow, or shorter; head with long ear tufts; tail closely barred with rufous and brown; not often seen, but common.

The short-eared owl is the size of the last, ear tufts inconspicuous; tail with few dark bands, everywhere common, but generally roosts all day.

The hawk owl is a little smaller than a crow, tail long with many white crossbars; hawklike; flies mostly in daytime; Southern Canada only in winter.

The barred owl is as large as a crow and stouter; plumage black with cross bands of dull white; flies rarely in daytime; cry of who who!

The barn owl is about as large as a crow; slender, big head, monkey face, long legs, not feathered to toes; plumage tawney reddish marked with brown and white; common; flies in daytime and hunts mice on ground; useful.

The snowy owl, seen only in winter, is much larger and stouter than a crow; plumage white, marked with dark spots.

The great-horned owl is larger than a crow, with large ear tufts; color drab, mottled with black, brown and white; barred thickly on the breast; flies day and night; savage; call a steamboat whistle; common everywhere, but wary; soars high in the air.

The great gray or eagle owl is the giant of its race, having no ear tufts; found in the Arctic and in Southern Canada only in winter.

The Bantam Regiments.

Unique among the armies of Europe, the British "Bantams" have amply justified the opinion which the late Lord Kitchener formed of them. They owe their existence to his initiative and foresight. Many men had been rejected because of their shortness of stature, and Lord Kitchener's idea was that if the little men wanted to fight for their country the right should not be denied them.

A correspondent at the British headquarters in the field says:

"No man over five feet three inches was accepted. Short men who had been turned away in the early days of the New Army formed the first battalion. As it was a success, others followed. At the front they were brigaded together, and a visitor to certain parts of the line sees thousands of sturdy short-legged men marching along the roads and keeping guard in the trenches."

Many jokes have been made about them. It was even suggested that when they went into the trenches some one would have to hold them up to the parapet to fire. Instead of having to hold them up, however, the difficulty is to keep them from showing their heads. They have the advantage of being small targets, and they are completely sheltered in a trench where another man's head would be exposed.

"They are particularly good at scouting," said one of their officers. "There is no limit to their nerve. It is nothing for them to crawl out in the dark across No Man's Land up to the German barbed wire. In one of the recent trench raids they captured a machine gun. No battalions have so thoroughly the good wishes of the entire army."

Following this idea of Lord Kitchener's, the Canadians also organized Bantam Battalions, which are now arriving at the front. The 216th Battalion, which was drawn from the Toronto division, recently reached England and was accorded a hearty reception.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

CONSUMPTION.

JOHN BROWN had noticed for some time that he was not up to the mark. In the morning he felt very well, but through the day he became tired, sleepy, and a little feverish. He had had a slight tickling cough for a month or two, but did not cough up anything.

One afternoon he felt a warmth behind his breastbone, and at the same time he had a salty taste in his mouth. Following a tickling in his throat he coughed and brought up a few teaspoonfuls of bright red blood.

This alarmed his friends very much, and he turned pale, his hands were cold and perspiration broke out on his forehead. His mother sent for the doctor, who examined his nose, throat, and chest, and finally told him
the blood came from his chest. He was placed in bed and told to keep quiet and that he need not have any fear for the bleeding. The physician took a sample of the material that John coughed up and found, as he suspected, that he was suffering from tuberculosis of the lungs.

Consumption is the cause of spitting of blood in nine cases out of ten.
Other causes are pneumonia, congestion, bronchitis, heart disease, aneurism, menstrual trouble, and scurvy. One out of every twenty-five cases of consumption starts with a slight hemorrhage. In one out of every six cases there is no other symptom. In two out of every three cases there is nothing to bring on a hemorrhage. The patient when quiet notices a salty taste, has a little tickling, coughs, and up comes the blood.

These early hemorrhages are never fatal. But the appearance of blood frightens most people, and perhaps it is a good thing to have the hemorrhage, because it is a reliable danger signal.

A patient of this kind should be kept quiet in bed for a few days. He usually needs no medicine, except in cases where he is very much frightened or shocked, when the doctor may give him some sedative. He must not get stimulants such as whiskey, aromatic spirits of ammonia, etc. If the side from which he is bleeding can be distinguished he should lie on that side.

If there is no return of hemorrhage after a few days he may get out in the open air. Horseback riding will be good exercise for him, and he may do a little outdoor work. Outdoor air and good food are the requisites for cure.

Above all things, a patient who has had a slight hemorrhage—and every other consumptive—should avoid the use of the numerous advertised “Cures for Consumption.” None of them are of any value in the treatment of this disease; some of them are positively harmful.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Answers to questions pertinent to public health will from time to time be made in this column. The questions should be short and to the point.
If it is not advisable to reply through this column, answer will be made by letter if stamped envelope is enclosed.

1.—Responsibility in cases of Communicable Diseases. A.A.G., Port Colborne.

Q.—In a case of scarlet fever or other contagious disease is the local board of health obliged to take care of the patient, provide nurses, doctors, and medicine?

A.—The Public Health Act, Section 58, Sub-Section 1 and 2, refers to this question as follows:—

“58.—(1) If any person coming from abroad, or residing in any municipality within Ontario, is infected, or has recently been infected with,
or exposed to, any communicable disease to which
this section is by the Regulations made applicable,
the medical officer of health or local board shall make effective provision for the public safety by removing such person to a separate house, or by otherwise isolating him,
and by providing medical attendance, medicine, nurses, and other assistance and necessities for him.

(2) The corporation of the municipality shall be entitled to recover from such person the amount expended in providing such medical attendance, medicine, nurses, and other assistance and necessaries for him, but not the expenditure incurred in providing a separate house or in otherwise isolating him.

War: A Sonnet.

The following sonnet was found scribbled on a sheet of paper among the effects returned to Canada of the late Major Miles Langstaff, the well-known young Toronto barrister, of the 75th Battalion, who was killed
in action:

I never thought that strange, romantic
War
Would shape my life and plan my destiny;
Though in my childhood's dreams I've seen his car
And grisly steeds flash grimly thwart
the sky.
Yet now behold a vaster, mightier
strife
Than echoed on the plains of sounding Troy,
Defeats and triumphs, death, wounds,
laughter, life,
All mingled in a strange complex alloy,
I view the panorama in a trance
Of awe, yet colored with a secret joy,
For I have breathed in epic and romance,
Have lived the dreams that thrilled me
as a boy!
How sound the ancient saying is, forsooth!
How weak is Fancy's gloss of Fact's
stern truth!

Fats as Foods.

Man needs a varied diet, and in the main the classification most suited to ordinary understanding is fats, proteids, and carbohydrates. Many other things are essential in a fully-balanced diet if one would enjoy that state of existence known as being in good health. A proper amount of water, a more careful attention to the important factors. No one can live any length of time in good health if there is not in their diet a proper proportion of all these elements, and it is hard to say that one is more important than the other, so closely allied are they one to another, and for their full action depend so much on the action of each to the other in the body. Fat forms about 15 per cent. of the weight of the body, and is found in all its parts. It occurs in the largest masses just under the skin, but it scattered in small amounts in all our tissues. In our food we get fat from the animal kingdom meat, butter, milk, and eggs. From the vegetable kingdom we get it from the various oils, olives, cottonseed, peanuts, etc., certain cereals, and nuts. Some food which we eat is changed into fat by chemical action in the body.
Food, sugar, and starch are so changed and are thus stored up in the body as reserve fat to be drawn upon if the fat is deficient in our diet.

KEEP YOUR FLOWERS.

Bloom May Be Prolonged by Following These Tips.

Some women seem to have a magic way with flowers. They can throw in seed and blooms will spring up.
They can wear a corsage bouquet a whole evening and never have it wilt,
and, as for cut flowers, they can keep them for weeks, it seems. Some one has said that it is the true flower lover
who has such luck, and of course a woman must love flowers to want to have them and keep them, but sometimes, in spite of the best intentions,
they do not know how to give cut flowers long life.

There are several secret methods which flower lovers practice to keep the cut blooms fresh beyond the usual length of time. Every one knows that to cut off a bit of the stems of flowers
every day before immersing them in fresh water will prolong their life.
Every one does not know, however,
that with woody stems it is a good plan to peel or cut away part of the hard bark so that the stem can absorb moisture.

A night bath for sturdy blooms is refreshing. Throw them, flowers and of steaming hot water and allow them to remain there an hour or so until the water has cooled off. If the flowers are very wilted a lump of camphor in the hot water will sometimes react upon them quicker. Salt water will revive some flowers more quickly than anything else.

A corsage bouquet which cannot be untied can be sprinkled with water
and kept in the icebox overnight.

A florist gives the following way of keeping blooming flowers for several weeks: Stick the stalks of the flowers in several inches of damp sand which has been placed in a bowl. Cover them with a glass jar or tumbler and move to a cool place where the sun
will not reach them.

Flowers benefit by massage. The Japanese find this a successful way of training blossoms with soft stems in the way they should go.

Never keep flowers in a warm room
overnight or in the bedroom either.

Tender Meats.

Quick cooking will not make steak
tender; it must be tender in the beginning. But tough meat can be made tender by cooking it very gently in a gravy for an hour or more. By browning it first we give it a good flavor and have seared the surface so that more of the juice will be retained than if raw meat were used. Some scraps of fat are browned and an onion sliced
and fried in the fat, a tablespoonful of flour is added, and when it is mixed smoothly with the fat a cupful of water is put in. The meat is put in the gravy and left covered on the back of the stove to cook slowly. Later carrot and turnip cut in cubes are added, and twenty minutes before serving the potatoes are put in. These have been pared, quartered and left in cold water for thirty minutes.

Trench Signs.

Wit is often shown in the notice boards which our soldiers set up in the trenches. Thus a frequently shelled trench junction bears the legend, "Don't stand about here—
there's a war on." A Canadian war correspondent has collected a number of these, one of the best being a spot which had once been used by the Germans as a dump for stores,
now labeled, "Fritz's Dump—Under Entirely New Management." A siege battery had the whole side of their mess knocked out—you could drive a gun team into the hole where the door had been. On a bit of remaining wall are the words, "Don't Stand Out There Knocking—Come Right In!"

On Wednesday evening, June 20th, the home of Mrs. Robert Maxwell, Odessa, was the scene of a pretty wedding when her youngest daughter, Edna Rose, was united in matrimony to Henry Emerson Sutton, of Newburgh. Sharply at eight o'clock the bride entered the drawing room and took her place beneath a beautiful arch of evergreens and hawthorne blossoms, daintily attired in a gown of white silk, with bridal veil caught with a wreath of orange blossoms and carrying a shower bouquet of white roses and maiden hair ferns. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Robert Spencer, of Camden East, after which congratulations were tendered.

EATON CATALOGUES.

The Eaton Catalogues, which came to Napanee a few weeks ago for distribution in this County, would fill a waggon. The cost of the Eaton catalogues sent to this county would meet the advertising bills of all the Napanee Merchants for a considerable period. The question is, whose is the better judgment? The Eaton Co's. or the town merchants, who keep on telling their local papers that "it doesn't pay to advertise." Eaton's are every year paying more money to develop their business and every year serves to demonstrate that they are cutting more deeply into the business of the town merchants, while the majority of the merchants blindly refuse to see why the business is going away from them and apply the remedy. The town merchant cannot fight the city department store by sitting in his office and wringing his hands. But if he will only recognize his position he will find that he has more than one counter in the game in his hands in the game with the city store. He is on the spot: He is personally known to the community he wishes to cater to; some of his costs are higher but he can at once make good every error that occurs if he will adopt as his own the two most trenchant weapons of the department store, "Live advertising and dependable service," he will at least secure a fair show of the business.
